Mr. Morrison's Little Game.

Mr. Morrison did not expect to pass his bill to wreck American industries. He had counted noses and saw that he was five or s x noses short. But he was determined to try his hand once more before he retires from "the pomps and vanity of this wicked world" and goes back to expound the law in the solitudes of Illinois.

He has kept up a lively sgitation, retarded other legislation that he might harp on his pet scheme, and contributed more than any other man to a state of more than any other man to a state of nervous apprehension which has kept back the rising tide of progress.

has come in spite of the tariff agitation. Tais improvement would have come somer and in larger measure if the tariff tinkers had not produced a condition of unrest; in a country of less ample resources it would have been even longer de ayed by this particularly hurtful wirepulling.

Since Mr. Morrison did not expect to pass his bill, he must have hoped to gain something tlse by his determined efforts. Mr. Morrison believes that the Democratic party may as well settle up its affairs and go out of business if it do not at every opportunity give its endorsement to free trade under the guise of tariff reform. He realizes that the Republican party is camped on the other ground, and that the

A young man with an expression of confidence on his face entered a Michigan avenue clothing store yesterday and asked: "I am straight business; I want a suit of clothes; there are seven of us who will buy our clothes at the same place; I have been sent on ahead to get prices." "Humph!" "If I bring the other six here to buy what will you make this $20 suit for?" The clothier went over and at down by the stove with a disgusted look on his face. "You didn't answer my question." "My frendt, please go oudt; you make me werry tired!" "What's the matter with you? don't you want me to bring the party here?" "No, my friendt, I don't; all my sales to-day goes to an orphan asylum, and I like to keep 'em down to a summer coat and a pair of second-hand pants! Better try der man two doors below."

He has a daughter just growing into womanbood and wants to give her a better education than the facilities of his neighborhood afford. In pursuance of this idea he called on a Cleveland friend last week and asked his advice. "Well," said the friend, "you might send her up here and give her the advantages that our echools afford." "If don't know," answered the father; "If hate to let her leave home; she ought to have just as good an education as the best of 'em, an' I can afford to pay for it, too; I want her to learn the languages, you know, an' dauch', an' etiquette, an' music." "Suppose," said the friend, "suppose you get a tutor for her." "A toster i' cried the father, "gosh, man, I don't expect her to play in no brass band! If she learns the planny, that's enough."

Mustn't Expect Too Much.

New York Times. An irritated gentleman dropped down into Wall street yesterday from the country. His grievance was that a mining company in which he was a stockholder had suddenly suspended dividends and had suddenly suspended dividends and was now levying assessments instead upon the shares. Full of wrath he sallied into the office of the company, met a bland young man, who smiled at the excited interrogation, and in tones most reassuring remarked: "Oh, don't worry, old man; it will come around all right after a while. The fact is, our treasurer has just bought a new house, and, of course, he has got to furnish it. Just have a little patience—have a little patience; you stockholders mustn't expect the whole world right off."

"It's a fact, gentlemen." replied the beleaguered one, "that I haven't a valuable thing in my possession, and I'm just wondering my possession, and I'm just wondering who'll trust me for my breakfast. Search me and you'll find it's true." "All right, pardner. Bill, you see that the gentleman Pitosses. Send to Dr. Kline, St. Arch St., Phile, Ps.

Bill, have you got anything about your clothes you could help the gentleman with?" "Thank you for your kindness," replied the latter; "the fact is, I'm not usually dead broke, but to-night I attended a church fair, and—" "Oh, that's it," excisined one of the mep, in a disgusted tone; "come along, Bill. Sixtieth Year.

The Youth's Companion celebrates this year its sixtieth anniversary. It might well be named the "Universal Companion," since its readers are found in 400,000 families. It is so wisely edited that its pages are as interesting to adults as to the young people. Besides the best short and aerial stories it contains a great variety of popular and useful information on natural history, science, home arts, games and aports, and is fully illustrated. It costs but $1.75 a year, and a subscription sent now is credited to January, 1888.
